DEATH ON THE BATTLE FIELD.

I would not lie on bed of down, Like pale girl, to die, I would not in the festal hall, Midst mirth and revelry.

I would not die an aged man,
With strength and reason gone;
Nor like a self-devoted monk,
In covert cell alone.

I long upon the battle-field In foremost rank to fall, Midst charge of horse and clang of arms, My banner for my pall!

Or give me on the bloody deck Triumphant to die,
When falling spars and crashing wreck, Praise your victory!

TEMPER.

Continued.

"Since this is your resolve, Francesca," and his voice trembled as he spoke, "hear me say, that we now part forever. I have tried to overlook your faults; I loved you with a true and deep affection—but I consider good temper an essential requisite to render the fireside happy. And you do not possess the jewel of a meek spirit. If the world's trials should come and humble that haughty heart, you may then sigh for the love of him who would willingly have shielded you from even the passing breeze, and now farewell!" and with one sad, lingering gaze upon her pale face, he released her hand.

"I thank you for restoring me to liberty," she bitterly replied. "Twas a sweet gift; and now, farewell forever;" and she left the room with a proud step.

Francesca's smile beamed bright in the drawing room of Miss Moreton, and she led the dance, and breathed the thrilling lay as though her heart knew not the touch of bitterness. And in her home, her step was still as proud, and her eyes as clear as if no shadow rested upon spirit—but the mother's eye was not deceived. She saw the struggle in Francesca's heart, and as she gradually became cold, and even reserved towards her, she felt that her child was changed indeed. The name of Clarence was a forgotten sound in their dwelling, and they heard that he had gone abroad.

Days of trial came, and in less than six months from the time our story commences, Mr. Deleva was declared a bankrupt.— Francesca saw all the furniture of their splendid home disposed of at public sale, and shed no tear. Many of the associations of happier hours rendered some of the articles dear; but the coldness of her demeanor never gave place to even an appearance of emotion during the trying scene. Her piano and harp were both sold, and it was only then her mother saw her lip quiver, and her pale cheek become a shade paler, and knew that the thought of Clarence Hardy had occasioned the change. They bid adieu to all the scenes that seemed as a silver link to bind them to the past, and retired to a small cottage that Mrs. Deleva owned, and which, through the liberality of Mr. Deleva's creditors, had been restored to him.

It was a summer evening, and Mr. Deleva, who had been absent all day, returned weary and dispirited to his home. He gazed upon the mild, pale face of his wife, and felt how nobly she had sustained the reverse of fortune, how sweetly and patiently she had ministered to all their wants, and poured the balm of consolation and sympathy into his soul, even while she was suffering for the comforts which her invalid frame required. Francesca's bounding step had become languid and slow; and the father's heart yearned for the sunny smile and thrilling tones of old. Change had indeed cast its gloomy mantle over their once happy dwelling, and even the playful smile of the little family, and the mirth of her laughing brother, could not win him from his brooding thoughts. An old and attached servant and his wife, who had belonged to Mr. Deleva's father, had insisted with the strong inclination which the African race feel towards a kind master, on accompanying them to their retirement. Old Cato entered with a letter.

"A letter for me," said Mr. Deleva, rousing himself from his reverie.
"Yes, massa, me jist git him," and seeing Mr. Deleva's dejection, "me hab' got the swing ready—come, Massa William, come Missy Emily, massa be tired. And he took the children from the room.

Mr. Deleva opened the letter, and read it, and then raised his eyes to heaven, as in thankfulness, though a deeper shade of sadness rested upon his brow. It was a moment of mingled joy and grief. He approached his wife. "Emily, my beloved, I have an offer, a very lucrative one, from Mr. Danvers—but I shall rest with you whether I accept it or not; but I think it a sacrifice I ought to make for my children, although the separation may cost me many pangs."

Mrs. Deleva's cheek grew very pale, but she commanded her feelings. "My husband, do not let a thought of me deter you from the path of duty. I shall have strength given me from above to meet every trial, and our children require your utmost exertions." Mr. Deleva gave his wife a look of warm approval as he pressed her hand, with much emotion, feeling how sweet was the love which smiled upon him, even when dark clouds were hovering over his head.

Francesca, who had left the room upon some slight pretext, now entered. Her father called her to his side and communicated the contents of the letter he had received, and added as he kissed her affectionately—"When I return, my child, I hope I shall be gladdened by one of the smiles that so often smoothed my path in days gone by.
I can hardly realize that it is my once warm hearted Francesca who is so reserved and cold to those who have ever cherished and loved her. It has given me much pain; and forgive me if I ask if Mr. Hardy wrote to you before he left the city. I have never been informed as to the cause of your unhappy separation, neither would I wish to solicit that confidence which my child withholds; but I see that you are unhappy."

"I am, I am, my dearest father," exclaimed Francesca, throwing herself into his arms, "and my own ungovernable temper has caused it all." And she wept as though her heart was breaking. "O," said she, as soon as she could speak, "You don't know how miserable I have been—I could not shed a tear, and when I saw all your trouble, and that what a friend Clarence would have been at such a time, as he is so generous and wealthy. I thought I never should forgive myself. Oh! I have so longed to open my heart—but you never mentioned him, and my feelings seemed so dead and chilled, I could not—and then Clarence in his farewell letter, told me how disappointed he was in my character, and that in his second choice, he should hold a meek, humble spirit of more value than wit or beauty—and I felt as if no one loved me."

Concluded to-morrow.

—An Irishman being asked whether he did not frequently converse with a friend in Irish, replied, "No, in late Jenny often speaks to me in Irish, but I always answer him in English." Why so? Because, you see, I don't want Jenny to know that I understand Irish.

DEGREES OF DRUNKENESS IN LONDON.—If Prince Albert was drunk, he would be called drated; if Lord Tristam was drunk he would be called elevated; if Mr. Plum the rich merchant was drunk, he would be called inflated; if a respectable tradesman be drunk he would be intoxicated; but if a workman be in liquor, it would be said that the nasty beast was as drunk as a pig.—London Paper.

¶ We learn from the Washington Union, that the President has removed Gen. Gaines from the command of the Western Division of the U. S. Army, and ordered him to repair forthwith to Washington.—The reason for this is, that the Gen., whose ardor seems to outstrip his judgment, has been guilty of irregularities, in assuming the power to call out any number of troops, when he thinks their services may be necessary, without waiting for orders from the Government,—thus seriously embarrassing the Department of War, which finds it difficult to restrain his irregular action, at so great a distance.

THE HON. JOHN P. HALE has been elected a Senator in Congress, from the State of New Hampshire, for six years from the 4th of March next; he was the Independent candidate, and was supported by the Whigs and the more moderate portion of the Democratic party. The vote stood thus:

Accompanying the book, is a certificate from her husband, that it is correct, and may be relied on as true. It is well worth reading. Price only twelve and a half cents.

¶ Corr. of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

WASHINGTON, Saturday evening.

Mr. Pakenham was closeted with Mr. Buchanan for about two hours to-day, and the latter has said that Mr. Pakenham has received instructions from his government in reference to the Oregon question, and is also vested with large discretionary powers in regard to making a proposition, but has not yet made one.

It is probable that the discretion given to him, has some reference with our being at war with Mexico.

I understand that Mr. Benton's speech of three days on the Oregon question, was not without the sanction of the President.

Mr. B. has been absent from his seat yesterday and to-day, a very unusual thing for him, and it is surmised that he has been called into "consultation" by the President and Secretary of State, upon the course proper to be pursued in reference to a treaty.

to the Rio Grande or to Vera Cruz. He would leave the Capital as soon as Congress assembled. Accounts of the disastrous actions of the 8th and 9th had been received at the Capital, and appeared in the official journal. The news was received with regret; but with a determination to fight the war out.

FROM OUR ARMY.

PURSUIT OF ARISTA'S FORCES.

PLANS OF MEXICO.

Murder of American Prisoners.

From the New Orleans Jeffersonian, June 2.

The steamer Mary Kingston, arrived last evening, four days from off Point Isabel, reports that on the 26th ult., about four hundred mounted Rangers, and two hundred Infantry volunteers, arrived from Texas at that place, by the way of Padre Island.

A party of Dragoon Rangers, went in pursuit of Arista's forces, who had fled from Matamoras on the 18th. After a slight encounter with the rear guard, they captured some mules, and a small lot of camp equipments.

Ampudia retreated from the town immediately after the interview with Gen. Arista. He retreated to the Rio Del Norte, where he encamped, awaiting a reinforcement from Paredes, who, it is reported, is on his way thither with fifteen hundred men.

The general impression is that Arista intends concentrating his forces at the Rio Vosca, and when he has received sufficient reinforcement from Paredes, he will renew hostilities.

There are now over 2,000 troops daily landing.

The Expectador of the 26th ult., published in the city of Mexico, gives a description of the kind of war the Mexican government propose to carry on against the United States; it is Guerrilla War—no pitched battles to be fought, but the country to be laid waste, our troops harassed, and all supplies cut off. The Mexicans are well skilled in this kind of warfare.

A party of fifteen men, two women, and a child, who started from Corpus Christi on the 2d of May, for Point Isabel, were taken prisoners by a number of rancheros, who first robbed them of all they possessed, tied them secure with a rope, and then cut their throats.

¶ A correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser, writing from Matamora, says:

Among the booty found in one of the public store-houses here, was a large quantity of cigars, which were yesterday distributed among the army, each man receiving some 500—which are now "being smoked" with a vengeance.

¶ The United States armories contain a million and a half of muskets.

THE TARIFF.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post, predicts a majority of 8 in the House of Representatives, for the modification of the tariff.

If I can but induce the people to call upon me, I will give them the most positive proof of the truth of this assertion, as I am determined to secure for the United States Clothing Store a tremendous run of custom, and, aware as I am, that competition is so severe, that the only mode of success is to offer my Goods at a small advance on Cost. Will the people call upon me? I will give them the most positive and pleasing evidence of what I say; still more, I will not urge them with undue persuasion to purchase what they do not want.
